About the course leaders:

Dr Adam Jacobs worked as a medical writer both for a contract research organisation and a medical communication agency before setting up his own company, Dianthus Medical Limited, in 1999. He has worked in many different areas of medical writing, and was co-author of the European Medical Writers Association (EMWA) guidelines on the role of medical writers in developing peer-reviewed publications. He is a past president of EMWA and one of its approved workshop leaders.

Dr Alison McIntosh has been a medical writer for the pharmaceutical industry since 1995 and has been a freelance medical writer for over eight years (see www.aagmedicalwriting.co.uk). Over this period she has successfully obtained and completed medical writing assignments from major pharmaceutical companies, CROs and communications agencies. She is a columnist for the EMWA Journal "The Write Stuff" and a workshop leader for the EMWA Professional Development Programme.
